

Parallels Device Management (Parallels Mac Management) licensing

- Parallels Mac Management 5.0

Information

Parallels Device Management for Configuration Manager is licensed on a per managed device basis. The number of individual licenses in your subscription denotes the number of devices (Mac computers or Apple mobile devices) that you can manage in Configuration Manager.

You license Parallels Device Management with a prepaid subscription, which works as follows:

- A subscription is purchased for a predefined period of time.
- A subscription can include any number of individual licenses (the maximum number of devices that you can manage).
- Support is included in the cost of the subscription.

You receive a single license key per subscription. Depending on the subscription type (Mac computer or Apple mobile device management), the license key can be used to activate the corresponding functionality in a single Parallels Device Management installation. If you need to activate a particular functionality in more than one Parallels Device Management installation, you need a separate license keys for each functionality in each installation.

Note: A Parallels Mac Management subscription must be registered in a Parallels business account before use.
